Doing the Will of God

Doing the Will of God

I've read this phrase over and over in spiritual and religious texts and yet a sense of real meaning eluded me until recently. I suspect part of my blocked comprehension was an emotional rejection for so often that phrase is used as a means of controlling other people. It seemed to me that someone announcing that they were 'doing God's will' almost automatically meant they weren't.

And yet I was sure there must be something there. I didn't obsess over my obliviousness but that concept sort of sat there in the background and got kind of moldy, a little like a forgotten leftover in the back of my spiritual refrigerator. Recently I started wondering once more about the meaning of that phrase.

Because I have no illusion of comprehending The Creator, I began closer to home and started thinking about 'my will'. It seemed to me that I have three centers of consciousness that are associated with will. I have emotional will located in the solar plexus. That has to do with the material universe and desire. "I want, therefore I am". This aspect of will is vitally important to plain old animal survival in addition to participating in manifesting Heart felt goals. The Mind is the center that focuses my attention. The Heart, of course is the third center of will. It is our access to Love.

Long ago, I learned to quiet my mind at will. That allowed my heart to open. There I chose a set of values to be the motivators of my actions. At the time I chose Beauty, Truth and Humor. These have turned out to be the primary elements of my existence. I consciously chose them... I willed them and they became the foundation of my personal universe.

With that realization I understood that God's Will is Love. His Love is infinite and eternal. Infinite Love encompasses every aspect of goodness in the whole of creation. It is primal; indeed, Love is the root quality of all Creation.

Every time I'm creating with Love, I'm doing 'The Will of God' although my efforts are extremely modest and incomplete reflections of the Creator's Love.

My Heart is the center that tunes my existence. My Mind becomes a receptor of inspiration and envisions the practical manifestation of inspired direction. My Emotions then become the third element of Will. The solar plexus, my Emotional center, is where I feel the qualities, attributes and harmonies of the material realm. When these three centers are acting as one it is the closest I can get to 'Doing the Will of God'
